FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 7

Cellars that Disappear It is a queer place to live in where you are liable to wake up in the morning and find that your cellar has disappeared, and that the bottom has dropped out of your well. That is just what happened in Larks. wille, Pa., and while it doesn'; surprise any of the residents, it makes it very inconven ient for them. There is but one well left in Larksville with a bottom in it, and a water famine has been prevented by the putting up a reservoir in which to collect a supply.
W.J. Thomas, whose farm is near Larksville heard a great squealing among his pigs early the other morning, and going out he found that a dezen or more of them were struggling to get out a deep fis-ure in the earth, which was not wide enough to let them all the way in, but was wide enough to hold them where they all had fallen. If the fissure had been a foot or so wider, the pigs would have disappeared as effectually in the fissure had been a foot or so wider, the pigs would have disappeared as effectually in the depths of the earth as the collars and the well botte in the have during the past two weeks. Farmer Thomas found his forces half way down in the ground, too, and a big patch or exbbage invisible. His house was also much swry, one side having sunk several inches. The cause of this peculiar situation at Larssville is that No. 2 cultiery of the Kingston (oal Company has been "working," something that a good many miners have been unable to do to much advantage for some time. This means that the roof of the colliery has been vinking and failing in, because proper support had been taken from it down in the mines. Larksville is built directly over the mines, and it is in these depths where the collars and well bottoms have gone, and where farmer Thomas' pigs would have gone if the crack in the mine roof at that place had been a little wider. The roof has been propped by timbers, but every once in a while these supports are crushed like pipe stems, and fly into spinnters. Men have been working night and day in staying the roof, and now people in Larksville think they may safely dig some new wells and cellars.
